What is it like to attend this school?

Pupils enjoy attending this friendly, welcoming school. They learn a broad range of subjects in French and English. Pupils particularly enjoy the many clubs available, such as gardening, drama, pottery, martial arts and chess. The oldest pupils spoke with enthusiasm about their recent residential trip to Edinburgh.

Staff expect pupils to work hard and do their best. Children get off to a strong start in the early years. As they work their way through the school, they follow the full French national curriculum. Pupils learn a wide range of knowledge and skills. They become fluent and enthusiastic readers and writers in both languages. Pupils are well prepared for their move to secondary school.

Pupils attend well and are punctual. Pupils are safe here. Bullying is rare. Staff deal with any incidents appropriately. Pupils quickly learn to get along with each other and how to manage their emotions when things go wrong. They are positive about their learning and want to do well. However, sometimes they do not behave well enough. This is because there is not a clear and consistent system of rewards and sanctions.

Almost all parents and carers contributing to Ofsted Parent View would recommend the school. Most parents said how pleased they are with the school's work. Nevertheless, some expressed concerns about the effectiveness of leadership.

What does the school do well and what does it need to do better?

The school's curriculum is broad and ambitious. It covers all the required areas of learning. Pupils achieve well throughout the school.

Staff know children in the early years well. They have strong relationships with parents and ensure that children's well-being is prioritised. There is a clear focus on building children's self-esteem and developing their skills, especially in literacy and numeracy. Classrooms are vibrant and well resourced. Children respond well to clear routines. They learn to behave kindly to each other. Children are well prepared for Year 1.

Leaders have planned the curriculum thoughtfully. Teachers' careful use of assessment ensures that pupils learn the French education system's requirements. Teachers have high expectations of pupils' learning. They encourage pupils to debate, share their opinions, and consider philosophical questions. Pupils listen well to each other and often think deeply about their learning.

Pupils develop their mathematical knowledge and skills successfully, including through problem-solving tasks. Pupils quickly learn to work independently and with their peers. They think carefully and work with each other to find solutions before asking for an adult's help. Pupils enjoy the thematic projects that connect subjects, including the arts and humanities. These help pupils to broaden their knowledge and understanding. Subjects and activities such as dance, singing, music and swimming enhance the curriculum further.

Staff prioritise pupils' reading throughout the school. Even though leaders have not provided the teachers of English with up-to-date and relevant training, these teachers make sure that pupils are taught to read. Most pupils are fluent readers in English and French before they reach Year 6. Pupils read expressively and enthusiastically. They enjoy reading for pleasure in both languages. Teachers quickly identify and provide support to the very few pupils who need it. This ensures that these pupils catch up quickly.

Leaders do not have a strong enough understanding of how to identify and support the small number of pupils who have special educational needs and/or disabilities (SEND). However, those pupils with education, health and care plans are supported well by their teachers and teaching assistants. Despite the lack of training, staff provide effective support to these pupils and meet their needs.

Class teachers have established routines which are usually understood and followed by pupils. However, expectations for pupils' behaviour are not consistently high. Leaders have not written and implemented a suitable behaviour policy. Staff have not been trained to understand the school's approach to rewards and sanctions. This leads to differences in the way behaviour is managed. Sometimes, pupils misbehave or disrupt learning in lessons. These behaviours are not dealt with consistently well. Pupils know that they can misbehave in some areas of the school, and sometimes do. Most pupils spoken to said that low-level disruption sometimes affects their learning.

The school's focus on pupils' personal development is a strength. Pupils are taught to be respectful and open-minded. They regularly learn about cultural diversity. For example, parents are invited into the school to speak to pupils about their cultural heritage. Pupils are taught about the many ways in which people are different. They learn about how to stay safe, including online. Pupils are well prepared for life in modern British society. The school offers more than 20 after-school clubs and staff organise frequent educational trips and visitors. During this year, pupils created their own books during a workshop led by a published author. A visit from a Paralympian helped pupils to learn about overcoming barriers in life. Visits to museums, farms and forests are linked to the topics pupils learn.

Leaders ensure that relationships education is taught in line with the statutory requirements. They put their policy online during the inspection. However, parents were not consulted about the school's intended approach to teaching relationships education.

Leaders, including the proprietor, have an underdeveloped understanding of the independent school standards, and other statutory guidance issued in the United Kingdom. The proprietor has not put in place appropriate arrangements to check all aspects of the school, including whether the independent school standards are consistently met. Leaders completed a lot of work during this inspection to ensure compliance with some of the requirements. Some of the independent school standards are not met.

Leaders' evaluation of the school's work is too generous and improvement plans lack rigour. Leaders do not provide staff, especially part-time specialist teachers and teachers of English, with suitable professional training. This has led to a lack of consistency in managing pupils' behaviour. It has also affected how well staff identify the needs of pupils who may have SEND. Staff were generally positive about the way in which leaders support them. They reported no concerns about their workload or well-being.

The school is compliant with Schedule 10 of the Equality Act 2010. The statutory safeguarding and welfare requirements of the early years foundation stage are met.

Safeguarding

The arrangements for safeguarding are effective.

Leaders and staff are trained in line with statutory requirements. Staff are vigilant and know who to report concerns to. Leaders follow up any concerns appropriately and ensure that suitable actions are taken to keep pupils safe. In some instances, aspects of leaders' record-keeping lack detail and rigour, for example documenting actions taken in light of concerns. This is because leaders' understanding of the latest 'Keeping children safe in education' guidance is underdeveloped. Nevertheless, these weaknesses do not compromise pupils' safety.

The school's safeguarding policy is available online and has been updated to reflect the most recent statutory guidance. Pre-employment vetting checks are carried out in accordance with requirements.

What does the school need to do to improve?

(Information for the school and proprietor)

- The proprietor has not established suitable arrangements to oversee the work of leaders. Leaders do not know about the range of statutory guidance which they should understand and ensure compliance with. The proprietor should realise their plans to introduce governance and strengthen leadership. They should ensure that leaders know and understand all the requirements and make sure these are all met, including all the independent school standards.
- Leaders have not written a suitable behaviour policy. Staff do not have a behaviour management procedure to follow. This means that pupils' behaviour is managed inconsistently and so pupils' behaviour is variable. Leaders should write a suitable behaviour policy that clearly outlines the school's intended approach to rewarding positive and sanctioning negative behaviours. They should train all staff to implement the policy consistently. Leaders should check that the policy is applied throughout the school.

- Leaders do not provide staff with a consistent programme of professional development. Some teachers, such as external specialist teachers, receive no training at all. Teachers, such as those responsible for teaching reading in English, rely on training they had many years ago. This means that staff do not have sufficient opportunities to develop their teaching or their subject knowledge. Leaders should ensure that professional training is provided. This training should include all staff and enable them to have a consistent understanding of how to implement the school's policies and procedures. Training should include the identification of and support for pupils with SEND, the management of behaviour, and subject-specific training, as required.
- Leaders have not consulted with parents about the school's relationships education policy. They should consult parents to develop and review their relationships education policy, ensuring that it meets the needs of pupils and parents' views are taken into account.
